Meet the Breeds

AKC Breed Rankings

New York, NY – Proving that bigger really is better, the American Kennel Club (AKC®) announced today that the Bulldog has muscled its way into the top 5, becoming the fifth most popular dog in the U.S. according to AKC Registration Statistics, bumping the tiny Yorkshire Terrier into sixth place for the first time since 2003. The Golden Retriever also pushed its way back to the top, overtaking the Beagle for third place, and Rottweilers continued their climb up the top 10 list by taking ninth place away from the Dachshund, both adding to the bigger breed trend. Labrador Retriever lovers have again spoken – the playful, family friendly breed remains the number one most popular breed in the U.S. for the 22nd consecutive year, tying with the Poodle for the longest reign in the top spot.

"Bigger breeds are making their move," said AKC Spokesperson Lisa Peterson. "The popularity of the pint-sized, portable pooch just gave way to a litter of larger breeds in the Top 10. These predictable, durable, steady breeds, like Labs and Golden Retrievers, are great with kids and offer the whole family more dog to love."

American Kennel Club Refuses Participation in and Support of the 2016 World Dog Show Should it be Hosted in Russia

On behalf of the American Kennel Club, our member clubs, and the American purebred dog fancy, a letter was sent to the FCI refusing to support or partake in the 2016 World Dog Show should it be held in Russia due to the country's recent proliferation of anti-gay and lesbian laws.

The letter sent states that "one of the most compelling aspects of the human-canine bond – cherished internationally more than ever before – is the fact that our dogs love us unconditionally," and that dogs do not discriminate. Moreover, "gender, race, sexual orientation and other status do not enter the equation of responsible pet ownership," the letter continued. We refuse to support competition in an environment where tolerance does not exist.

We wanted to share this position with dog lovers and reaffirm that "the international dog community deserves to enjoy the World Dog Show in a place that stands for freedom and equal rights for all."

This week, the FCI General Committee issued a response regarding the recent passage of anti-gay laws, expressing their "deep concern about this situation and about the way it will affect the future of the canine world in Russia."

(<http://www.fci.be/GeneralCommittee/20130813AntiGayLaws.aspx>)

In their response, the FCI General Committee reaffirmed their identification with Olympic values and ended their response stating, "The FCI General Committee and – as far as we know – dog owners, exhibitors, breeders and handlers, we all strive to organize and participate in events in a world where we would be treated like dogs treat us, without any discrimination. This has been, is and will be one of our supreme mottoes."
